Sample:

As kids we all were inherently happy and excited beings. As kids, we were full of energy, enthusiasm, courage, curiosity, fearlessness and what not. Kids are not afraid of falling and are not afraid of what others will think or say about them. They would keep try new things and keep taking risks despite several attempts to stop them. Their focus is unwavering and the imagination is uncluttered. They are free from the sufferings of past and worries of the future. No psychological fears and no imaginary problems bothers them.

~~As kids we all were inherently happy and excited beings. As kids, we were full of energy, enthusiasm, courage, curiosity, fearlessness and what not. Kids are not afraid of falling and are not afraid of what others will think or say about them. They would keep try new things and keep taking risks despite several attempts to stop them. Their focus is unwavering and the imagination is uncluttered. They are free from the sufferings of past and worries of the future. No psychological fears and no imaginary problems bothers them.~~ Do we ever see a child afraid of doing anything new? No. Children are inherently happy, excited about every small thing. They are full of energy and enthusiasm. They are curious and most importantly, fearless. Children are never afraid to fail, neither are they bothered by what others think or talk about them. They seem to be the eternal risk-takers, aren't they? Thoughts unchained and uncluttered, they hardly waver from their focus. A child's mind is never enslaved. It is free to imagine and free from any sufferings of the past or worries of the future. [S1]
